Cassellholme and the North Bay Parry Sound District Health Unit are working together to investigate and manage the ongoing COVID-19 outbreak at Cassellholme. This work includes continuing to work with experts in laboratory medicine at the North Bay Regional Health Centre and Public Health Ontario to understand the results of the COVID-19 outbreak at Cassellholme. Additionally, Cassellholme and the Health Unit are collaborating on outbreak management activities and improving processes related to community detection and response, to help protect the health of Cassellholme residents, staff and essential visitors.

By working together, we are able to better protect individuals who belong to the most vulnerable population in our community.

Each agency has an important role within our local health system. We all share the same goal of protecting health and stopping the spread of COVID-19. Without collaboration, our shared goal would not be reached.

As we learn new information, we will share it with the community.

The COVID-19 pandemic has forced our agencies to be flexible, responsive and most of all, collaborative, as no one agency has all the answers or can manage the COVID-19 response alone. We are always looking to improve the way we manage this evolving and dynamic virus to ensure the most protection for our community.
